Bomb attacks in Iraq kill dozens; US reporters hurt

At least 30 people were killed and dozens more injured in two separate bomb attacks in Iraq on Tuesday, one of which targeted a group of US reporters.

The first attack, which took place in the northern city of Mosul, targeted a group of US reporters who were on their way to a meeting with a senior Iraqi official. The reporters were killed by a car bomb that exploded as they were walking.

The second attack, which took place in the southern city of Basra, targeted a group of people who were walking along a busy street. The attack resulted in the deaths of at least 10 people and the injuries of many others.

The attacks are part of a series of bombings that have been carried out in Iraq since the US-led coalition forces invaded the country in 2003. The bombings are often attributed to al-Qaeda in Iraq, a militant group that has been active in the country since the invasion.

The US military has said that it is not responsible for the attacks and that it is working to identify and capture the people who carried them out. The military has also said that it is taking steps to protect its personnel and equipment from future attacks.
